

1. Zero shot prompting

Prompt

Create a stand-up comedy routine lasting about 5 minutes focused on Engineering college students life.

2. Single shot prompting

Write a 5-minute stand-up comedy routine in English focused on the life of engineering college students. The routine should include observational humor and relatable jokes about classes, exams, procrastination, hostel life, professors, canteen food, viva exams, and placements. Use a casual and humorous tone with punchlines that resonate with college students. The content should feel authentic and funny, as if performed live on stage.

3. Few-shot prompting

Prompt

You are a stand-up comedian writing a 5-minute comedy routine for a college audience. Below are examples of short comedy segments. Use them as inspiration to create a full routine centered around the life of engineering students. Include jokes about lectures, professors, canteen food, exams, viva, placements, and hostel life. Keep the tone funny, relatable, and casual. End with a strong punchline.

Example 1:

"Engineering professors are like WiFi signals — strong in the first row, completely lost in the back."

Example 2:

"In our hostel, we don't eat dinner — we survive it. The food is so bad even the bacteria refuse to grow."

4. Negative prompting

Generate a 5-minute stand-up comedy routine in English focused on the life of engineering college students. Make it funny, casual, and relatable.

Avoid the following:

Do not use dark humor or offensive language.

Do not include jokes that target or stereotype any gender, religion, or ethnicity.

Do not repeat clichés like "engineers don't get jobs" unless presented in a fresh, unique way.

Do not make the jokes too generic — focus on the specific experience of engineering college life (like struggling with attendance, weird viva questions, hostel food disasters, last-minute exam prep, etc.).

5. Iterative prompting

Step 1

Write a rough draft of a 5-minute stand-up comedy routine about the life of engineering college students. Include jokes about lectures, professors, viva, exams, hostel life, and placements. Use a humorous and casual tone.

Step 2

Great! Now improve the punchlines. Make them sharper, more surprising, and funnier — like something a real stand-up comedian would say live.
